President's Message

Bob O'Hanlon

Summer is finally here and as usual, PRFMS is involved in a number of exciting activities. We are actively involved in Downers Grove Heritage Festival, which is the last weekend in June. You'll find us in the tent near the Two Way Street music stage, and, we are planning an informal jam session after the stage acts are finished for the day, around 5:00 pm.

We are also planning a few Music by the Yard events, where members open their homes and back yards to our group for some long music sessions, food and drinks. Check our web site and this issue of Quarter Notes for specific information.

Our summer campout is on August 14-16 at Shabbona Lake State Park, so please join us for a fun-filled and music-filled weekend. Along with our regular schedule of sing-arounds and bluegrass jams, it should be a great summer for us.

Another item of interest is that 2009 is the 25th year of our existence as the Plank Road Folk Music Society and we feel that warrants a nice celebration. We are working on some ideas and will keep you posted. It is remarkable that we have been around that long and are still a healthy, vibrant organization.

I'm hoping to see all of you sometime soon. In the meantime, enjoy the blessings and pleasures of the summer season. — Bob O'Hanlon

MUSIC INSTRUCTION

An Interview with Mary and Jim Grosso of Thursday's Child

Harmony singing

By Vicki Ingle

"It is not worth singing for ourselves; it is nicer if two people sing together. Then more people: hundreds, thousands, until the huge Harmony can be heard, in which we can all be just one, indeed. Then will we be able to say: "May the whole world be happy!" Zoltan Kodaly, 1937; Hungarian composer, teacher and ethnomusicologist.

Beginning in 1905, Mr. Kodaly visited remote villages in Hungary to collect folk songs, recording them on phonographic cylinders. He was renowned for being a wonderful teacher, composed much music for children and wrote many articles on folk music.

There is hardly a more beautiful sound to be heard than on a Friday night at the Two Way Street Coffee House, when the audience spontaneously joins the performing artist on the chorus of a song, in a wide range of harmony. Whew. So beautiful.

For some of us though, harmony singing is not all that spontaneous - we have to work at it. And, sometimes, singing harmony can be a downright mystery. If you do not sing harmony on a regular basis, where do you start? How do you get better?

I talked to one of two couples that comprise Thursday's Child (Mary and Jim Grosso, and, Mary Kay and Bob Lopardo), a band of harmony singers extraordinaire, to see if they could shed some light on what they do best. Anyone that wants to harmonize better with other singers will find something useful in what Mary and Jim have to say.

The place to begin, Mary said, is with a lot of listening. Start out with your favorite duo and try to pick out the harmony part. When you think you have a feel for the part, try singing along with the recording. Eventually you will be able to practice singing different parts to songs on the radio, songs that may or may not have harmony on the original recording.

Some of Jim's favorite duos are Jim and Jesse McReynolds, the Osbournes, Hazel Dickens & Alice Gerrard, and Sam Bush and John Cowan. And, he said, you can't beat Emmy Lou Harris as a harmony singer. Mary said its especially fun and easy for the beginning harmony singer to sing along with Alison Krauss' bluegrass material and to the songs on the album Big Mon, The Songs of Bill Monroe, by Ricky Skaggs and Friends.

While it is not necessary to have an education in music theory to sing good harmony, Mary said it helps if you understand how chords are put together. Chords are normally constructed of the base or "tonic" note (Not the "bass" note! Grin.) of a scale and the 3rd and 5th note of that scale; i.e. a G chord contains (G-B-D), an A chord contains (A-C#-E), etc. (With minor chords, the third note is flatted so Gm becomes G-Bb-D).

One popular approach to harmony singing in folk, bluegrass and barbershop quartet music is to use common names or descriptions for the different vocal parts. Jim said, "in this system the "lead" singer sings the melody of the song, the tenor part normally follows the lead part a third interval higher (e.g. when the lead part is on "G", the tenor is on "B"). The baritone part is normally lower than the lead, and is usually responsible for filling in the missing, remaining note of the chord on "sustains" (i.e. when the lead singer holds one note for an extended time). Note that in this terminology, "tenor" and "baritone" have no relation to vocal range - they only refer to their relationship to the lead part. The "bass" part, when present, has the job of hitting the tonic note of the chord on sustains (e.g. the tonic note of a "G" chord is "G", etc.)."

Once you get used to it, this approach becomes intuitive. You hear, in your head, the note that needs to be sung and you don't have to analyze every song, note by note. Jim said that Beethoven composed his last three symphonies when completely deaf, that he must have heard all the parts in his head.

Also, there are many, many instances when it works for the harmony singer to do something else other than fill out the notes of a chord - like sustain one note, even when the melody line shifts, or, sing an octave above the lead part, for example. However, these parts are not the ones people generally have trouble singing.

Harmony singing is a listening exercise. Jim said you need to try to cultivate the ability to listen to yourself and what is going on around you at the same time and this takes a little practice. It is "some tricky listening," said Mary, and it takes a lot of singing, a lot of trying, to master it. Eventually, the harmony part becomes its own entity for the harmony singer, like the melody line is for the lead singer.

The very best way to learn harmony singing is simply to sing with other people. Find a partner and learn some simpler songs first. Also, singing with a choir can be good practice.

So, grab your partner and do si do around the chords until you find that beautiful harmony in your soul!

More groups recommended by the Grossos: Cadillac Sky, Claire Lynch, Special Consensus and the Infamous String Dusters.

Yes, It Was Great to be a Living Legend

By Leslie Korshak

Bob Gibson is one of the great forces of American music. He and his banjo climbed aboard "A Horse Named Bill" in 1954 and began an incredible journey, unique to the world of music, as it was to the lives he touched and the people he inspired... Often alone, and sometimes with friends, he has ridden across fifty years of American musical history, producing sounds that have been interpreted by artists as diverse in talent and approach as Henry Mancini and the Byrds; John Denver and David Crosby; Peter, Paul and Mary and Simon and Garfunkel; Shel Silverstein and the incomparable Odetta. Although his body finally succumbed to the ravages of Progressive Supranuclear Palsy several years ago (1996), his influence on even those who were not yet born prior to his semi-retirement, continues to assert itself, becoming their inspiration.

Peter Yarrow, a dear, and loving friend of forty years, and Bobby last hung out and performed together two years running at the glorious, miniature of a folk festival held each October in Napa, that part of California devoted to making of wine. Peter said,

"When Bobby sang with you it was a gracious act. He never sang too loudly, he always sensed the moment of movement to a softer or louder part and he listened, listened intently, so that his voice would merge just right with your own. He never interfered with the flight of your melody, he just danced around it - and if you gave him leave-he'd invite you to dance around his. Singing together became two people agreeing to respect each other's special and unique flights. If you listen to Peter Paul and Mary, you will hear Bob Gibson."

The author of this article, Leslie Korshak, was a long time companion to Bob Gibson. She recently moved back to Highland Park.

Because it's never what you have, but what you contribute, that matters in the end."* — Bob Gibson

Leading the Band - Part 3

By Colby Maddox

When you think of bandleaders, what images come to mind? Do you see sharp suits, big cowboy hats and boots, tall hair and low-cut dresses, stern looks on stage and maybe harsh words on the bus after a gig? Maybe so, but history tells us that famous bandleaders like Duke Ellington, Bob Wills, Muddy Waters, Bill Monroe and Alison Krauss built their success on the contributions of the musicians they worked with by either composing and selecting tunes that fit band members personal styles or making the band members compositions a permanent part of the bands repertoire. This old-school type of leadership involves a long-term commitment to the folks you are playing with, and turns the band into a creative corporation with employee-shareholders.

Sounds cool and makes you wonder why all bands don't strive to work this way. Let us not forget that the last twenty years have been nothing short of a complete upheaval for the music industry. The days when musicians had to band together or work under a leader in order to get their work published are long gone. New music is no longer developed by flame-keepers (artist/band-leaders) and carried to a limited board of gate keepers (record labels, FM radio), and the expanding wealth of options for going public with your music leave a tangled trail that individual pioneers, digital Daniel Boones, will be busy exploring for the next 20 years. If musicians work together at all in the current climate it is because they want to and not because they feel they have to, and it takes a new kind of leadership to keep the band model vital.

Most musicians just want to play and have pretty simple reasons for pursuing a musical life. It is not natural to spend too much time thinking about who your potential audiences are and how they can be reached, and in this era of expanded opportunities it is not always clear what avenues to pursue. Modern day band members increasingly do understand the need to be strategic with pursuing opportunities and don't need the constant promise of playing on a nationally syndicated radio show, putting a recording out on a small but reputable label, or jockeying for festival bookings to keep their interest. In this new environment, band management can be built on old ideas like long-term commitment and an attention to creating a quality product. Even if the old "band boss" model has passed on and there is no clear path to success and world market domination, working together to create music is still the dividend that is paid out to everyone for their time invested.

Where is Jody Alis?

By Vicki Ingle

Jody Alis Glienke, an exceptional folk singer and songwriter in the Chicago area in the 1970s, is living with her husband, Roger (originally in the jazz-fusion band, "Street Dancer"), in Los Angeles, California. With the help and support of the PRFMS "chat group," through yahoo, and their friends, we were able to find her and talk to her! You will remember Jody playing at the usual Chicago folk music venues, Charlotte's Web in Rockford, and as a guest on WFMT's "The Midnight Special," co-produced by Rich Warren.

Jody Alis

The search for Jody started with an audience recording made by Oak Parker Len Palombi in 1975 and 1976 at Somebody Else's Troubles and a desire on the part of yours truly to get Jody's permission to record one of the taped songs, "Minnesota," which was presumably one of her original tunes. The end result was that we were able to find out what Jody is up to these days, and, hopefully, our interest has encouraged her to professionally record some of her material.

What is Jody up to these days? She continued her career in the communications industry when she moved to California and presently works for Pacific Bell. Her son and daughter are now in college and she has more time to play open mics at the UnUrban Cafe, a coffee house five blocks from where she lives, and an occasional gig there. She's written a handful of new songs since leaving Illinois in 1982 that we hope we will get to hear someday. And, perhaps she will be encouraged to write more songs.

Jody is spending most of her spare time these days practicing Zen Buddhism - her humble response to our interest in her music is certainly consistent with her philosophy. I think it's safe to say that both Jody and I have had a great deal of fun meeting each other and talking music. And, yes, she did give me permission to record her song, "Minnesota."

Folk Festival DJ on 90.9, WDCB Radio

"Lilli Kuzma is the best thing that's happened to the Chicago area folk scene in decades! She is just plain enthusiastic about good music, and it doesn't matter whether the players of that music are well known, full time, nationally touring acts represented by big agencies, or home grown folks who just happen to be very good! We are all stars as far as she is concerned, and it's that attitude that makes good musicians into stars. It was just such generous-minded and open-hearted people like Lilli who helped to make the early '70s Chicago folk scene so vibrant, nurturing talents like Steve Goodman, John Prine and Bonnie Koloc, all of whom went on to national prominence.

With her help,
maybe it can happen again!"
